The chimney-sweep, with his grimy habiliments, his sooty face, has been for centuries so familiar and picturesque a figure, alike in fiction and in actual life, that his disappearance will be regarded almost as much as that of some popular landmark. This is the case not only in the United Kingdom, but also on the Continent.

At Berlin each year the British ambassador gives a dinner for the chimney-sweeps of the capital, and of their apprentices. This dinner has been given annually for the past hundred years, and is believed to commemorate the fact that the son of one of the former English envoys, who had been kidnapped as a child in England, was discovered in the Prussian capital, working as an apprentice to a chimney-sweep, who had adopted him, and between the two services."
